

CHURCH CLAIM IN FIRE COURT

Natives Again Before Commission With Some Rather Fishy Figures.

The Kaunakapili Church claim for $10,704 for the building, was before the Fire Commission yesterday. H. L. Kerr, called as an expert, testified that 5 per cent should be deducted from the original cost of the building for depreciation in value, and he thought also that the salvage was about $5,000.

Julia Fox, a native, had in a claim for $1,068 for household goods, and she was closely questioned as to certain items. Eighteen quilts were listed, also a number of calabashes, which it was estimated, had not been destroyed by the fire.

The claim of an aged native who was on the stand in the afternoon was also examined. He testified that his family lived in but one room, and his furniture consisted of three beds, half a dozen chairs, a bureau, two tables, and sundry other property, which the commission thought exceeded the capacity of the room.

There may be another strike on the part of the journeymen painters. In a recent strike they asked for an eight-hour day, which was conceded them. Now the strike will be for higher wages, the minimum being $3 a day. At present the white painters get $3 a day, Hawaiians $2 to $3, and Japs from $1 up, but several contractors have been asked by Hawaiians for $3 a day. Most of these were non-union men, who said they had been urged by white painters to make this request and join the union. It is thought that this is a scheme on the part of the union men, who think that a strike of the non-union Hawaiians will force the union men's wages up.
